Workplace Injuries and Injury Claims are normally emotionally and physically demanding since the hurt individual has to pursue an injury claim while likewise suffering from the injury.

Under the workers insurance system, workers are given guaranteed compensation for accepted claims in exchange for giving up their right to sue for work-related injuries. The employer finances the program through premiums. This is of benefit to the employer, who receives protection from lawsuits under this system of collective liability. Injured personnel and their families receive just compensation, while expenses are spread among employers.

Employees may however, take legal action against staff in some circumstances. Staff may take legal action against employees that are industry exempt from the workers insurance program. Workers could sue fellow staff if they were "outside the course of their employment" when the injury happened. A worker can be entitled to benefits under the insurance plan with respect to an injury or disease, and may likewise be entitled to sue an individual in respect of the injury; for instance, an individual driving in the course of their employment may sue the driver of the vehicle that injured them.
